He was arrested in public and is facing charges that will effect him the rest of his life. The court system has been activated. He is now on house arrest. He has lost his job. He can not be four miles from where you work or live. Basically that's all of downtown. All his hang outs. He will not be able to do anything at the hipp or the Acrosstown. And that's just the start. After the investigation, if they can, they will prosecute him, they will try to get him to plea out. The plea agreement will include being labeled a sex offender for the rest of his life. But I don't think he will choose that. I think it will go to trail. Thats when the lawyers will have there say. The prosecution will shred him and make him look like a monster. And the defense that gets hired will come after you. They will be just as ruthless looking into everything they can about you and your past. It will be a bloodbath and all in the public eye. And the community will take sides. He will be shunned. And you will be shunned.

Then if Mike is found guilty, he will go to prison with a 10 year maximum penalty. God help him if this happens. Personally, I don't believe he will survive between being different and his illness. Even if he gets half that. 5 years. He will be bullied and abuse beyond belief. The experience will change him for ever if he survives.

I know men who have gone through the system. 'Normal' men. They come out more broken. Not healed.

Everyone will have to live with this. It will bring so much damage to so many.

Please think long and hard about your choices now. Think about what you want. Think about how healing can occur.

I do not believe his intent was to hurt you. That's not who he is. This is not a violent man. If he was or if I felt any weird sexual energy from him I would not have the open door policy I have with him. It's just not the case.

Please look into you heart. Please ask yourself if the punishment equals the crime.

Ask yourself if you what to hurt him or heal him.
